I've been a Scout since the age of six. Scouting taught me the basics, like how to start fires, to build a camp, and to lead my patrol. I learned to be supportive of my peers, to be resilient during tough times, and to stand up for those who need it. Scouting instilled in me a deep appreciation of the richness and diversity of our cultures, helped me to foster lifelong friendships and offered me a second family. Scouting enabled me to lead my NSO to its first ever Strategy and comprehensive Youth Programme Review. Scouting empowered me to represent millions of young people at world level, establish a structure ensuring continued youth representation on global platforms, author one of our principal non-formal education documents, contribute to the safety of young people and adults through our Code of Conduct and build global partnerships to strengthen our movement. Scouting made me the person I am today and enabled me to step forward and volunteer to lead and help strengthen our Movement.
